The Senate Foreign Relations Committee will meet Monday in executive session to hear evidence concerning the violence that plagued Vice President Nixon on his visit to South America. The Central Intelligence Agency and officials of the State Department will testify behind closed doors. Senator Wayne Morse, who is chairman of the subcommittee to inquire into the violence in Latin America, said that if the evidence indicates that there is a global network of Communist trouble-making, the investigation will be broadened and will include areas in addition to South America. Senator Morse says that he expects to confer with Vice President Nixon, but the indications are that Mr. Nixon will not be asked to testify formally.
